Thiruvananthapuram, May 12 — Schogini Systems, a Technopark IT firm, is trying to wean young minds from blood-thirsty computer games to intelligent gaming.

Schogini Systems has charted out this strategy of intelligent gaming as a commitment towards the teenagers and young people who are reading less and spending more time before computers or on mobile phones.

As part of the firm's strategy, FIDE (World Chess Federation) ranked chess player Mohammed Salih, Schogini's brand ambassador, will challenge laser game Khet's inventor Luke Hooper to a game at the Technopark campus here.

Khet is an abstract strategy board game using lasers, where players take turns to move Egyptian-themed pieces around the playing field, and fire their low-powered laser diode after each move. Most of the pieces

Schogini announces Artificial Intelligence based gaming apps

THURSDAY, 09 FEBRUARY 2012 23:28 KERALA IT NEWS

Tvm: Technopark based Schogini Systems today announced its foray into the artificial intelligence gaming industry with games for iPhones and iPads. The company has partnered with two of the leading Artificial Intelligence (AI) based Chess engine creators Don Daley and American Chess Grand Master Larry Kaufman to offer Komodo 4 on mobile and Facebook platforms. (Komodo 4 is rated as one of the top two chess engines in the world).

Interacting with the media, Sreeprakash Neelakantan, MD, Schogini Systems said, "Schogini has about 200 apps on iTunes and 100+ on the Android market. We get about 3,000 downloads every day and there has been a 150% increase every month, in the last few months. 80% of our revenue comes from Apple. We have plans to port all our games to the Android platform and at least launch four apps for Windows Mobile by March. Schogini has plans to build products that can nurture the learning and thinking abilities of our kids on at 'Purami' After the chess-like laser powered-game 'Khet' became popular in the US, its founder Luke Hopper was looking for its mobile version. Finally, Hopper found the answer in a group of vibrant and young developers at Technopark here.

Technopark-based IT firm Schogini Systems Private Limited had made a foray into intelligent gaming by developing 'The Laser Game' rated as the top two chess engines in the world. Dom Daley also associates with Schogini to build Khet artificial intelligence to power the mobile and facebook versions of the Khet app.

Unveiling the ipad app games, Nirmal Sreerakshan, CEO of Schogini Systems, said it is time to turn kids towards thinking games.

Kids are addicted to dumb games. Khet is a thinking game. Komodo 4 will help in bringing up more intelligent children.

British Prime Minister David Cameron personally congratulated Unmesh, the founder of Schogini. The main feature of the app was 'Emergency Button' which when pressed, tracks the location of the user in time of emergency situation such that, accident, absconds etc.

Daily Eco Alert, an application developed by Schogini, has a VIP fan US President Barack Obama liked this application in Facebook.

Blind Brand Ambassador for Mobile Apps Company

THIRUVANANTHAPURAM: Schogini Systems P Ltd, the Technopark-based mobile application developer company, has roped in FIDE-ranked chess player Mohammed Salihi, who is blind by birth, as their 'Brand Ambassador - Intelligent Interfaces'. This is an attempt to take intelligent gaming strategies to teens and youngsters who are fast turning addicts to dumb and blood-thirsty games.

As part of the new strategy, Salihi challenged laser game Khet's inventor Luke Hooper for a game, which promises to be of epic proportions, at the Schogini office at Leela Inforpark, on the Technopark campus on Saturday.

Salihi lost the match 1-0. Commenting on the game, Luke Hooper said Salihi had put up a brave fight before he lost the game, which lasted more than an hour.

Schogini Systems has charted out this unique strategy to take their intelligent games to the masses as a leap forward in their commitment towards the teens and young people who are reading less and spending more time in front of a computer or on mobile phones.

Over 300 applications used by thousands of users of the iPad and iPhone mobile devices around the world are developed by a Kerala-based IT firm.

The Laser Game, Elbit 2.0 and iGaming are the products by Schlegin Systems that function from the Linux platform.

The efforts of Schlegin have been recognised internationally. An execu-

President of the United States, Mr Barack Obama has interacted with the firm. Unmesh Gangadhara, recently recruited as from Britain, P.M. David Cameron, for the best application in 2010.

"Silicon Valley Comes to the UK," appeared in 2010.

A team of 100 professionals developed by Schlegin Systems is now successfully being sent to various police departments.

With iPad, iPhone and iPod, the popularity in Kerala, Schlegin headed by city Department for introducing disaster alert services. Volunteers will receive the alerts and the first to do so will get help towards devoting time towards the cause.

The Laser Game was developed by one of our own students by using our own software and hardware," said Mr Venkatesh Chagundla who introduced the game to President Obama.

Schlegin will introduce its new version of the application by month. The products include educational and medical applications for a school to empower students to play games applications and more.

Schlegin in 2007 in the US started recently moving to the Technopark and it is now working on a square foot area.
